Players must regularly weigh themselves before and after training or a match. The difference in weight indicates the amount of fluid lost. The player must drink one and a half litres of fluid for each kilogram lost. And to think that players who perspire heavily sometimes lose two and a half kilos of fluid during a match!

When a player loses one and a half percent of his body weight through perspiration, his body's performance is already deteriorating. Therefore, it is important to drink enough during a match. That is also why players often immediately ask for a water bottle during a break.
